Not illustrated. 1857 Excerpt: .parted In hate, whose mining depths so intervene They can meet no more, though broken-hearted. We were two hours descending the mountain, with Mont Blanc constantly in view, at each turn of the road seeming more majestic. The diligence drew up at a spring, and the guard showed us a marble tablet, which marks the spot where Napoleon stopped to look upon Geneva, as he was entering it as conqueror. What a wondrous power still exists even in the remembrance of Napoleon! it encircles the Continent like an atmosphere; and yet he perished a captive on that lonely isle in mid-ocean. Every where in Europe have we seen tributes to him in cities, in valleys, on plains, and even in the depths of the mountains the inscription of his name rendered almost sacred the wild pass. We would fain have lingered longer with the glorious landscape before us, but the diligence, like Time, waits for no man, (much less for woman,) and soon we drove rapidly to the city, being delayed at the gates some time by the troublesome passports, the greatest bore of European travel. We had been told, ere we left Paris, that passports would not be needed in Switzerland; imagine therefore our amazement when they were examined three times before we reached Geneva, and there the Prefect of Police took possession of them, giving us a written permission to remain a certain number of days. CHAPTER XXI. Geneva.--The city contains thirty-two thousand...
