An Engelhard, Before the Philanthropic and Dialectic Societies of the University of North Carolina, June, 1878 Young Gentlemen of the Philanthropic and Dialectic Societies: When the storm-beaten mariner, suspended for long and anxious hours in darkness and tumult, between hope and despair, at length beholds the Light-house rising above the waters and through the tempest - the beacon of his safety - his heart must beat as mine does now, when standing here by its very corner-stones and amid its hallowed alters, I see the light of this great University, obscured by dark and dreary shadows for many years, now again emerging like a Sun from the clouds, and spreading its benignant rays far and wide over the land. An emotion higher and better still is excited in my heart; it is the emotion which we imagine a son must feel when, after long years of doubt and fear that the devoted mother of his life and love has been lost, he again embraces her to his bosom and realizes that she is restored and truly lives in her beauty and happiness. The tribes of Israel did not feel so high a sentiment of joy when they had passed the perils of the Red Sea, and believed that their deliverance was at hand. They knew the miracle was not their work; its beneficence and sublimity was all from God. Their sufferings might have invoked it; their virtues certainly had not aspired to or deserved it. The wisdom of the Almighty had not selected their excellence as the means of securing their happiness. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands...
