Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: . personal friend of Grant, Sherman, and a host of other notables of that day, a gifted speaker who recounts most wonderful tales of the war period. Associating with these venerable contemporaries helped to keep father young. In the Congressional Hall at Washington hangs a picture of this club, one of the most unique in all the world. It was also published in The Geographical magazine in 1919. Many congratulations came to father from friends in the east when they recognized his face in the group. Two of the members of this club, Dr. Morrison and Senator Cole, have since passed their 100th birthday, thus fulfilling the club s motto: Grow old gracefully and live 100 years. As one by one dropped out, father would remark, They couldn t quite make it. A year before he left us he had a hard and trying siege of neuritis on the side of his face and also to some extent in his back. This confined him to his room for several months. He felt that this illness might be his last. But the pain left him, he gradually grew stronger and was well enough to be out of doors again. He never, however, quite regained his normal condition. While confined to his room, his mind wandered back over his early years, and when the invitation came to the annual Prugh reunion to be held in Dayton, Ohio, he had me take down these memoirs to be read on...
