Excerpt: .above the water from one to fifteen feet high, and from one of the lowest of these a kingbird flew while his mate scolded and hovered above the boat. Paddling up, I was taken aback to find in the crotch of the stub, but a foot above water, their nest and in it three blotched eggs. As I left them to their lighthouse home I wished them well, but if they had left the land for safety I had misgivings whether their offspring would ever reach terra firma, for their first flight would have to be over fifty yards. A wild venture for a young king. A kingfisher seemed to agree with me as he flew over. On the morning of July nineteenth I started on a seven-mile drive to the summit of Wachusett. The sky was overhung with dark rain-clouds as the horse trotted...
