Excerpt: . . . and its uncalculated strength made significant. Our war is being fought by the children of the nation. It is to-day, as always, within the province of woman, in perilous hours, to enfold her exposed children in protective raiment and to give them nourishment from her own body. The maternal forces instinctively draw towards the threatened and broken elements of life, and to maintain, restore and heal these they manifest the most primal and imperishable power of Nature, the indomitable and very will of Nature, her word made flesh command. This power is our recuperative and creative resource. It awaits, as truly as any army of history, the unfaltering command for organised action. The poster is charged with the duty of sounding this command throughout the state of Michigan. There are countless women in Michigan, as well as in all America, whose varied types of...
